LARGE AUDIENCE ENJOYS "BIMBO" LEGION COMEDY

Miss Elizabeth Stallsmith Wins New Laurels In Specialty Dance.

Playing to an audience which filled every seat in the Majestic Theatre in the Hotel Gettysburg annex, home talent entertainingly presented "Bimbo," a musical extravaganza, under the auspices of the Albert J. Lentz post, American Legion.

Catchy tunes, sparkling costumes, witty lines and excellent rendition of vocal selections by the principals were some of the features of the home talent performance which impressed themselves upon the large and enthusiastic audience. It was said that 1200 saw the performance.

To heighten the enjoyment of the evening's entertainment were several specialty numbers which met with instant and unqualified approval of the theatre-goers. A solo dance between acts by Miss Elizabeth Stallsmith was perhaps the hit of the evening, and the dancer favored with an encore. Miss Stallsmith also appeared as "the flame" in a "flame and moth" dance, in which a group of young girls took part. This number also was well executed and an encore was responded to.

Chorus Features

Miss Anna Sefton, as Sylvia Vande Veer, and Henry Meyer, as Jack Damon, had the titular singing roles, and the blending of these two well trained voices was delightful to listen to and each appearance of the couple was received with abundant applause. Their duet numbers, with choruses, "Bungalow For Two," "Little Boy Blue" and "Where Were You Hiding," were particularly effective.

The "Toddle Town" number, led by Miss Ruth Beard, as Georgianna Tibbs, was a pleasing one. The house was figuratively "brought down" by the specialty drill of the Bimbo army, featuring "Whitely Woodward," "Monk" Menchey, "Pappie" wope, "Zeke" Collins, "Steamer" Stanley, "Fats" Petterson and "Shady" Shader. Several humorous quartet numbers by members of this group evoked bursts of laughter and rounds of applause.

Amusing Situations

Although the plot of the show was light, the action was sustained by the humor injected by the various witty lines of the principals and the very amusing situations created by the theme.

Cast and choruses showed the results of careful training on the part of Miss Hazel Anderson, of the John B. Rogers Producing Company, who staged the performance.

The action of the piece takes place on the island of "Bimbo." Hiram Budd, Fred Pfeffer, an American motion picture man, has been made governor of the island, in the South Seas, by mistake. He is constantly pursued by three women, a native princess, Miss Anna Geiselman, and two girls from his home town, Oshkosh, Wisconsin, Miss Ellen Tipton and Miss Ruth Beard. His attempts to escape matrimony furnished many laughable situations.

Then there were two lovers, portrayed by Miss Anna Sefton, who cannot marry until her Aunt Portia, Miss Mary Ramer, has been provided with a man, and Jack, Henry Meyer, has put his railroad through the country. The General, Murray Miller, helps provide a share of the comedy, as also does Lord Algernon, played by Wimbirt Neely, who is traveling in the South Seas.

The musical numbers and the personnel of the choruses follow.

COLLEGE GRAD PASSES WHILE PLAYING CHESS

Rev. F. G. Gotwald Dies In Harrisburg During Tournament Thursday.

Suffering a heart attack while engaged in a chess tournament in Harrisburg, the Rev. Dr. Frederick G. Gotwald, of York, a former student at Gettysburg College, and well-known in Lutheran church circles here and elsewhere, died suddenly at 10 o'clock, Thursday evening. He was aged 58 years, and was a member of the class of 1888 at Gettysburg College.

Doctor Gotwald suffered the attack while playing as a member of the York chess team. He fell forward upon the board and Dr. Roland Jessop, another member of the York team, went to his aid, but found him dead.

When the chess team arrived in Harrisburg yesterday, Rev. Dr. Gotwald complained that he was not feeling well. Immediately preceding the game, he left the room for fresh air. He returned and play began only to be broken up by his death.

Orained In 1891

Rev. Dr. Gotwald was a graduate of the York County Academy, the York Collegiate Institute and of Wittenburg College and Seminary, at Springfield, Ohio. He was ordained in the Ohio city in 1891 and received his first charge in that city. He remained there several years and then returned to his native city.

Rev. Dr. Gotwald has always been active in ministerial circles. During the thirty-four years of his service he had held many high positions in both local and national Lutheran capacities. Up until the time of his death Dr. Gotwald was executive secretary of the board of education of the United Lutheran church of America. Besides this he was instrumental in founding the Trinity Lutheran church, York, the Augsburg Lutheran church and the Chapel of the Advent, York. He was a member of the Lutheran board of missionaries and the York Engineering Society.

Born In St. Paul Parsonage

The deceased was a son of the late Rev. and Mrs. L. A. Gotwald, who resided in York throughout their entire lives. The elder minister was pastor of St. Paul's Lutheran church and it was in the parsonage of that church that the late Rev. Gotwald was born.

Dr. Gotwald leaves, besides his widow, Mrs. Julia A. Small Gotwald, two sons, Rev. Dr. Luther Gotwald, a missionary to India, and David E. S. Gotwald, at home; a daughter, Mary Fulton Small Gotwald, a student at the Elmira College for Women, at Elmira, New York; two sisters, Mrs. H. C. Pontius, Canton, Ohio, and Mrs. Glen M. Cummings, East Cleveland, Ohio; a brother, Robert C. Gotwald, Springfield, Ohio, and four grandchildren, three of whom are residing in India.

Funeral arrangements have not been completed as yet.

MANY COUNTIANS TO ATTEND MEET

Members of Adult Bible Classes of Adams County to Attend Altoona Convention.

All details and arrangements for the state wide gathering of organized adult Bible classes at Altoona on Washington's Birthday have been completed.

The superintendent of Organized Adult Bible Classes of Adams county is making a strong effort to have this county well represented, believing that the strong program at the annual convention will do much in furthering the work of the Bible classes throughout the county.

Last year's program at the Harrisburg convention, "Civic Righteousness" and "Law Enforcement" were featured, but this year the theme of the convention is entirely upon the "Service the Adult Bible Class can render in helping the Church," and in this convention it is hoped that many pastors will be in attendance.

Among the pastors will be Bishop W. F. McDowell, L. L. D., of Washington, D. C.; Rev. John W. Elliott, D. D., Director of Adult Work of the Baptist Church of Philadelphia; Rev. Charles B. Urmay, D. D., of Belleville, Pennsylvania; James Mace, Director of Religious Work of the Pittsburgh Y. M. C. A.; Rev. E. E. Barnhart, Adult Division Superintendent of the Ohio State Association; George W. Penniman, General Secretary of the Allegheny County Sabbath School Association, and others.

The convention will be held in the First Methodist Episcopal church.

County President Ernest Knouse in connection with the adult superintendent is also interested in having Adams county well represented and they will be pleased to supply those interested with further information.

AUTO SHOW WILL OPEN FEB. 24TH; MANY FEATURES

Large Display Of Cars, Music, Accessory Exhibits and Other Attractions.

The "big show"—Gettysburg's second annual automobile exhibition under the auspices of the Adams County Automobile Dealers' Association—will be thrown open to the public on Wednesday morning, February 24, at 10 o'clock, for a four-day run at the new Plank and Bell garage, York street.

The various committees in whose hands preliminary arrangements for the show have been placed are reporting progress day by day as the time for the opening of the auto show draws nearer. This afternoon, several members of the committee in charge of decorating the new, large garage on York street in which the exhibits will be on display, attended the Harrisburg automobile show for inspirations and suggestions.

Twelve automobile dealers in Adams county, whose exhibits at the forthcoming show will cover a wide range, from the inexpensive machine to the high-priced limousine, will have space in the large main portion of the new garage, directly in the rear of the show room.

Expect More Exhibitions

The county auto dealers will meet at the court house Saturday evening at 8 o'clock to draw for position. Most of the dealers will show between three and five models of cars at the exposition, which gives promise of completely overshadowing last year's successful event, both in number of exhibitors of cars, accessories and manufacturers of allied automotive products.

A nominal charge of 25 cents will be charged for admission to the show, to cover the rental of the garage, music, decorations and incidentals, according to members of the committee. Three door awards will be made on the closing night of the show. The three awards will have a monetary value of almost $100.

Music To Feature

Various local orchestras have been secured to furnish music for the show on the four evenings and Saturday afternoon. The music of last year's exhibition was a feature.

Calls for space in the show room section of the garage where accessory dealers, machine shop proprietors and manufacturers of allied industries and businesses will have booths have been very numerous, and indications are that this portion of the show will far exceed that of last year. Gasoline and oil companies, dealers in automobile insurance, automobile magazines, machine shop proprietors who specialize in automobile repair work have made inquiries concerning space.

Interest in the coming show is widespread not only in Adams but in the adjoining counties as well, and large attendances are expected by those in charge. More than 2,000 persons attended the 1925 show at the Gettysburg Garage, and that number is expected to be exceeded by several hundred at the forthcoming exhibition.

PLAN REUNION OF JOHNS HEIRS

Gathering to be Held in Hanover to Promote Settlement of Large Estate Abroad.

S. L. Johns, McSherrystown, is arranging to hold a family reunion and business meeting of all the Johns heirs in the United States, in Hanover April 5, 6 and 7. The proposed gathering followed announcement in newspapers of the vast estate in Wales to which the Johns heirs in the United States are entitled.

Communications have been passing between Mr. Johns and heirs in from 13 to 17 states in the United States, including the District of Columbia, comprising about 1000 persons, according to Mr. Johns. By means of this meeting it is hoped that ways and means will be provided to send an attorney to Wales to investigate and to take up the establishment of the estate which has been known to the family for 150 years and has only recently been agitated among the prospective heirs. About 43 years ago an attorney was sent abroad for this purpose, but after preliminary investigation was recalled because of lack of funds to proceed. It is now planned to pool money to follow up the work begun by him.

Mr. Johns has a complete family tree recorded and is now in possession of evidence locating the Welsh and German Bibles about 300 years old belonging to the Johns family and also the old stone structure where the first pilgrims of the family worshipped for more than 30 years, a Quaker meeting house located on the border of Lancaster and Chester counties. During the reunion Mr. Johns plans to have the heirs apparent participate in an elaborate program of entertainment including trips into the surrounding country, the visiting of manufacturing plants and other places of interest to strangers.

"What else would you have?" he wanted to know. "We have no wars to fight and no work to do. There is nothing left but pastime. People used to write poems and read Shakespeare. Rotten times they had of it. Today we invent pleasures to be built upon by our senses. That's more reasonable and it involves a learned knowledge of who belongs to who and what's the chances of taking her away from him? But we were talking of this architect fellow. Tell me about him, please. Seems to enjoy working at something."

"You'll have to satisfy my own curiosity first," Joanna declared. "Perhaps you'll send for the 'esteemed journal.' I'd like to know what is being said of him. He was a very struggling student when I saw him last."

An attendant quickly produced a copy of L'Echo which bore that morning's date. Michael pointed to a paragraph in the column of the new arrivals at the various resorts along the fashionable coast. Both Kenilworth and Yvonne watched her furtively, when, with a murmured "Pardon!" she fastened her eyes on the short item.

"Among the bookings on the Blue Express at Calais yesterday, was the distinguished young American architect, John Wilmore, who comes from a visit to London for an indefinite stay. He has made reservations at the Las Palmiers. Mr. Wilmore's recent achievement of fame has been extremely interesting. It is understood that a year or so ago he was unknown. American capitalists suddenly appreciated the great merits of his daring conception of a war memorial in which are included some startling conventional features which have caused international discussion among artists and scholars generally. It is believed his work will be a valuable contribution not only to America but to society and the world in general."

The paragraph explained the knowledge of the other's that John was coming; that he had arrived for the Blue Express came in the morning. But it did not explain why he had not notified her. Something about it all quivered at her lips, briefly.

"Extraordinary," Kenilworth remarked when she put the paper aside. "How a chap with nothing but a dream can suddenly stumble upon recognition and success. We all remember Mr. Wilmore in New York. If I remember, Miss Manners took occasion to be provoked with him."

"Then it was more than an acquaintance," Prince Michael declared. "One is never provoked with an acquaintance. We won't intrude upon that aspect, Mademoiselle," he added, to Joanna. "As you will probably present him, I'd like to know how he got on so well."

"I'm afraid I can't tell you much more than people generally know," she replied. "It came about after I left America with Yvonne. I ran away, you know, because no one I knew there had any confidence in me."

Prince Michael detected a seriousness as of some unexpressed thought and he needed observation. He sought her hand, and would have put his over it, oblivious to the others at the table. Joanna brought her hand away. Quietly, she went on:

"Before then we had been quite good friends. I remember he had some plan for a memorial, something he wanted some day to build. I was never interested much, because it wasn't anything I could understand, or wanted to. I remember, though, he objected to its being called a 'war' memorial. It was to be something commemorating soldiers themselves. All kind of soldiers, I think—not only our own, but of other countries as well. Somehow he's made it known about, I suppose. Now when you have a mind to talk to him about it, you will know almost as much as I do."

"Morbidity," Joanna observed. "I can't imagine anything I'd run away from quicker than a reminder of that sort. Sentimental though, I suppose they'll always be doing things of the kind."

"The striking feature of his conception," Yvonne remarked, "seems to be his offering of a woman, a young woman, as the force of inspiration of all soldiers and putting her, instead of the customary fighting figure on his highest pedestal. Others have given tribute to the fighter himself. He proposes a monumental structure which shall draw attention to what soldiers fight for." Of Joanna she asked: "Isn't that the idea?"

"Yes," Joanna agreed. "That wasn't his original plan, but he seems to have adopted it. It's what has caught on. I've read that he contends that it is always a girl that soldiers fight for. They've always left a girl of some kind at home, one like me, perhaps, or the one they're married to—or at least a mother. And mothers and wives were girls in their day. John has explained that he doesn't think girls change like fashions do. To soldiers who leave them to go to fight for them, they have always been quite the same reliable and worthwhile. It's a quaint sort of an idea, but I suppose it must be a good one."

Yvonne had shot a sudden glance at Joanna, and kept her eyes on her, intently, until she finished.

"If I remember correctly," she observed, "he did not always have the opinion that women don't change."

Joanna nodded at her. "Yes, I've been wondering if he's altered his theories, or just altered his scheme to make it pay."

"At any rate," Kenilworth remarked, "he is in a fair way to see his project materialize. It's becoming internationalized and there is talk already of duplicating the idea in other countries. The generation will go any length to draw a lesson or an undisturb-

"En plien," she called again, and swept her $5,000 francs—$5,000—onto the table.

ing memory out of the last upheaval."

Yvonne decided they had given enough of the tea hour to the merits of John's bid for popular fame. She had observed that Kenilworth, while he gave his part to the discussion, was uneasy. He had studied Joanna's face constantly, and watched every changing light in her eyes and lips about her lips. She proposed a turn about the Casino rooms. "We shall have time for an hour of play in the et quar ante hall," Prince Michael appropriated her at once, much to Joanna's satisfaction, and led the way along the avenue of poplars through the Casino gardens to the white terrace.

Kenilworth, lagging behind with Joanna, went directly to the subject that concerned him deeply. "You are not going to let his turning up interfere with things, are you?" he asked.

"So far as I can remember," she returned, "he has never interfered much with me. Used to want to, of course, but couldn't then. I could hardly fancy him being much of an influence now."

"Have you, then, completely wiped him out? As you seemed to imply that night when you invited me to join you in a kiss?"

She laughed. "That was so many ages ago, Roddy! I'd lost track of that one."

"That is evading the question," he rebuked her.

"John wouldn't have me then," she said simply, "when I thought he was the one thing in all the world I wanted to buy with my money. I doubt if he'd want me at all now. He's famous, you see, and well on the road to prosperity. He won't need to take chances. I'm not as good a bet for him now as I was then. Am I, Roddy?"

She was darning him with her smile. There was no wistfulness in it at all, just frank, open provocation.

"Do you know," he exclaimed, irritably, "you are the most unfathomable creature within my experience!"

She was silent until they came up to the terrace steps. She answered him then as if there had been no lapse of time. "No, I'm not. I was thoroughly fathomed this morning. A man told me he wanted me however and whatever I am. If I could say just what I'd like to say about that, I'd say that would be a damn safe bargain for a man to make with any girl. But I can't say that, of course, for I must be a hypocrite and let on that I never swear."

CHAPTER XXV
When Joanna Gambles
Kenilworth would have guided his companion around the big Casino building to the pigeon field which lies between it and the sea, but Joanna preferred to go out to the white terrace and into the gambling rooms.

In Roddy's manner there was every sign of the truth of Yvonne's observation in the Trianon summer house at Amette; that he was worried by the reappearance of John in the girl's schemes of things. Secretly she was disturbed by him. During the months in New York, before her departure for London and France, he had been a superbcilious admirer, graceful in his devotions, impressing her as a man of the world who had decided to affect enthusiasm over a new toy. Then, suddenly, his attitude and his purpose had altered.

He had deliberately followed her and Yvonne to London. It was then that circle of men and women which revolved about men of his kind, young men who are old enough to be discreet and rich enough to be idle, began to take stock of the seriousness of Roddy Kenilworth in his pursuit of the young American millionaire. Joanna Manners. There was a great deal of bonfire grief over this state of affairs, for Kenilworth was known as one who went from one affair to another at slight provocation, but always magnificently—generously. It was felt that if he were definitely lost to his world of sub rosa romance it would be disastrous.

It was generally wished that the young American, whose fresh youth had proved an irresistible charm, where charm is translated in terms of cash, would succumb to the inevitable—Roddy's determination—and in the usual course, free him for his next feminine engagement. "For," said one young woman to her dancing partner at the fashionable Embassy Club, "Roddy looks as though he were going to be serious, this time; he hasn't had a serious affair since the early days of Yvonne Coutant. He won't be a free agent until he gets over this attack, and the American is delaying matters."

Joanna liked Roddy Kenilworth. She had heard, as people do hear, that Yvonne had been of his making. How much to believe and what to discount she didn't know, nor care. She gloried in her ability, she who had come out from behind the silk counter, to bring the green tints into his eyes whenever she was of the whim to make him take note of her. She knew Roddy was in a continual fight with himself over her. Dormitory was always her slave. Brandon served her whenever she asked, but he remained aloof; she couldn't sway him—or, rather, she wouldn't dare. But Roddy made an occasional effort to baffle the spell of her, and to thwart him was like quaffing champagne.

But, just now, with Prince Michael's sudden surrender to her creating a new undertone, and with the coming of John to irritate him, she was restless beneath Kenilworth's intent appraisal. And she didn't want to be cross examined about John. She hoped she was concealing from Roddy the constant searching of her eyes along the vistas of the Terrace and into the Casino Square which fronts the crowded tables of the Cafe de Paris, for a familiar figure.

In the atrium, the red and gold hung foyers of the Casino, Yvonne and Michael were awaiting them. "The Rooms are crowded," Yvonne observed. "I've decided to hunt a place at the roulette tables."

Around each of the tables were crowds four or five deep—the late afternoon company of curious visitors to the world's gayest shrine of sin, tourists, cocottes seeking monstrosities for the evening, and old women hangers-on holding chairs with the hope of selling them to after-dinner habits. All of these last, the old women of the gambling rooms, knew each one of the party that crossed the wide polished floor of the splendidly decorated rooms and glanced about for places. Cromplers, too, gave little signs to each other at the entrance of the sleek Yvonne and the lovely young American. Both had been the heroines of sensational plays that had become legends. Yvonne dropped into a chair. Michael bought from an old hag for a fifty franc note. Kenilworth guided Joanna to another and won a curtsy from the ancient dame who surrendered it by the size of his tip. Joanna plunged immediately into her play. Kenilworth standing close behind her.

When Joanna gambled she lost herself entirely. The color came into her cheeks as the rouge et noir, the red and black, divided its favors.

Others played with gold louis, or franc notes, counting their plaques nervously after each turn of the wheel. Joanna tossed thousand franc notes onto her colors or numbers or columns with feverish excitement. When she lost, and the croupier's wooden rake drew her stake away from her, she made pretty grimaces. When she won, and the rake pushed toward her fingers its pile of gold and silver and notes, she clapped her hands and turned up to smile up at the man who stood over her. On this afternoon she made her first plays listlessly, as if her enthusiasm had been left with the hats of the men in the Atrium; but with one or two winnings she had forgotten everything, seemingly, but the cry of the croupiers and the spinning of the wheel.

Brandon, strolling through the Rooms as was his daily afternoon custom, came upon them. He pushed his way among the spectators who always gathered about the Golden Girl when rumor spread through the rooms that she was playing, and stood with Kenilworth. Joanna, conscious of his presence, lifted her ungloved fingers over her shoulder for him to touch them. Kenilworth observed to the newcomer: "She's in a reckless mood. But she's winning!"

Text Of Senator Bonbrake's Speech In State Senate

The following is the text of the address delivered by Senator Bonbrake of the Adams-Franklin district in the Senate, in extra session, Monday, reprinted from the Legislative Journal, the official Senate publication:

Question of Personal Privilege
Mr. Bonbrake. Mr. President, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The President. The Senator from Franklin, Mr. Bonbrake, will state his question of personal privilege.

Mr. Bonbrake. Ladies and gentlemen of the Senate, the General Assembly has been called in extraordinary session by His Excellency, the Governor of this Commonwealth, ostensibly for eight specific purposes, and in pursuance thereof twenty-one bills have been presented which would govern and control primary elections in this Commonwealth, eleven bills which would have to do with banks and building and loan associations, and seven bills which would create, govern and control what some have seen fit to call Giant Power.

Some of these bills provide, by their very terms, drastic and radical legislation and changes of a drastic and radical character in the present laws of this Commonwealth. Whatever we do in private life or as servants of the whole people—and we are public servants of the whole people of Pennsylvania—let us get away from the growing and prevailing tendency to centralize power, to be extremists and to be radical; for radicalism is the great besetting, preponderant, consuming national curse of this day and of this generation; let us place, with no uncertain pressure, the stamp of our disapproval upon radical legislation whenever and wherever it may appear, and to whatever subjects it may pertain let us get away from that single-track theory, and broaden our vision, so that we are enabled to appreciate that all subjects—with few exceptions—have two sides, and are enabled to see those sides without bias and without prejudice; for until we are enabled to see those sides without bias and without prejudice we will not be able to legislate acceptably or efficiently for the whole people of Pennsylvania.

If there exists in this state today any real necessity, any urgent need for any legislation, certainly the people of this Commonwealth, would know and feel that need and appreciate that necessity; and there would need be no apologies offered for the act of calling this extraordinary session of the General Assembly of Pennsylvania into being. The power vested in the governor to call into special session the legislative bodies of this Commonwealth contemplates that that power shall be exercised only where conditions have changed since the last regular session of the General Assembly or where great hardship or great wrong would inure to the public welfare and the public generally which could not be remedied at the next regular session of the General Assembly.

In other words, an extraordinary session of the legislative bodies of Pennsylvania is contemplated only in those cases where it is absolutely necessary for the public welfare and the protection of the general public that we shall have immediate, emergency, remedial legislation.

No recommendations came from the chief executive of Pennsylvania to the regular session in 1925 recommending changes in the election laws, yet we have the same election laws today that we had in 1925, and the same election laws today that we had in 1922, when the present governor of this Commonwealth carried the unrighteous and unholy city of Philadelphia by a tremendous majority.

It is truly remarkable that we were not officially notified during the session of 1925 that political conditions in Philadelphia and Pittsburgh were not as pure and spotless as the newly fallen snow, and it is equally significant that no official recognition by the chief executive of the state of what is now an alleged rottenness of the thieving politicians of Philadelphia was manifested until now.

Under the cloak of reform,—and there is no other word in the English language more abused or more misused or made more elastic to cover up evil designs and evil deeds than the word "reform"—under the cloak of reform we are asked to pass election legislation that will, not in its terms but in its effect, disfranchise thousands of unfortunates who were not born into homes of wealth and of affluence, thousands of uneducated and ignorant but poor and honest men in this Commonwealth.

It is entirely fitting and entirely proper, and it is our duty as public servants of the whole people, to surround our elections with such safety

Just Folks

By Edgar A. Guest

THOSE FIRST LONG TROUSERS
We went together, just as though
Together we must share the blow,
Though she alone had gone before,
We went together to the store
And watched him proudly try them on,
And then our little boy was gone.
Our little knickerbockered lad
Came out a youth, in trousers clad!

The smiling clerk said "Fine!" but, oh,
Our stab of pain he couldn't know.
Perhaps he truly thought it strange
That mother didn't like the change,
And felt that something in her died
The minute that he stepped inside
That little dressing room alone,
But well I understood that moan.

She knew that never more he'd be
The little boy upon her knee,
The laughing, loving, roguish child
Whose kisses on her cheeks were piled.
She knew what change was taking place

Within that narrow dressing space.
Her child went in beyond a doubt,
But soon a man was coming out.

The clerk said: "Fine!" but well I knew
The mother held a different view.

The little lad she'd loved was gone,
There stood a youth with trousers on;
A youth, with shoulders broad and square,

A youth who had a jaunty air,
And when we left that clothing store
We had a little boy no more.

legislation as will maintain the sanctity of the ballot and record the honest opinion of the people; but are not these men and these women who have never had the advantages of an education, who have not been born into the lap of luxury, who have been compelled to fight for their very living from their early childhood, these men and these women who are unable to read and write and understand their ballots,—are they not a part of the great people of Pennsylvania, and part of the blood and bone and sinew of this great nation?

Some time before the induction of Mr. Pinchot into the office of governor of this Commonwealth the North Penn Bank crash occurred in Philadelphia with resulting losses to many, yes to hundreds of poor men and poor women deposition and notwithstanding that fact during the session of 1925 Mr. Pinchot saw no necessity for any change or any amendment to the banking laws of this Commonwealth. Eleven days after the 1925 session, three banks in Allegheny county closed their doors. The governor recommended no special legislation in the session of 1925 for the protection of shareholders in building and loan associations and he went so far in his address to the joint meeting of the legislative bodies over in the House as to say with respect to that "that more attention has been devoted to the examination of building and loan associations than ever before, with the great resulting increase of safety to their members and a notable reduction of unfair advantages on the part of certain unscrupulous promoters."

Last summer, a few months after the governor made his boast of the greater protection and security afforded building and loan associations, seventeen building and loan associations in Philadelphia closed their doors at one time.

Now at this special session this same governor recommends legislation with respect to both of these subjects, which eight months ago he saw no necessity for, and under precisely the same conditions then as exist today.

Mr. President, in order to justify this call for an extraordinary session of the legislature we are asked to find as a fact that all these various ills from which this Commonwealth is supposed to be suffering and to have become anaemic are acute rather than chronic, and to apply in allopathic doses the cure-all test of legislation. Legislation has its mission and fulfills its purpose. Ladies and gentlemen of the Senate, you can no more legislate purity, honesty and righteousness into the human heart than you can legislate brains into the human head. In our courts of justice we do not convict on legislative enactment, we convict upon the facts in each case and changes in the law will not change the facts. We have in Pennsylvania today rather comprehensive election laws, providing penalties certainly in keeping with penalties provided for violations of law generally. Many of these election bills which have been presented to this session very materially increased the penalties for violations. And why thirst for the blood of the election crooks and regard lightly crime of a more serious nature to the life and to the property of our people and to the peace and good order of our community. I am not here to condone crime or to defend criminals. For the latter I will give but little quarter and I am not opposed to increased penalties for violations of the election laws provided we have increased penalties for violations of all laws. And especially is that true in view of these days of criminal activity.

It should not be concluded from my remarks that I am unalterably opposed to the passage of all laws that have been or may be presented to this special session, if I can be shown that these bills are necessary for the public welfare and will redound to the greatest good, to the greatest number, all things considered, without the sacrifice of inherent rights, I will accede such bills my support, regardless of the source from which they come. But if they will further complicate existing laws and be simply more junk to further embarrass the people of this Commonwealth and to further encumber the overloaded statutes of Pennsylvania. I will oppose them. We have too many laws in Pennsylvania now. We are an overlegislated but not an overcontrolled people in this state today. What we need in Pennsylvania today is not more laws, but a better administration and a better enforcement of the laws now upon our statute books, and more men in public office who appreciate that a public official is a public servant of the whole people. If we are unable to enforce the laws now upon our statute books,—and we seem to be—by what method of reasoning can we conclude that we will be in any better position to enforce any new laws that may be placed here by this special session of the legislature of this Commonwealth?

Mr. President, what we need in the official life of this state today is not more laws, but more men of broad vision of comprehensive understanding, of mature thought, of normal development and men with more good, common horse sense, not rainbow chasers or dreamers, but men who are conservative in both thought and action and with the courage of their conviction.

Ladies and gentlemen of the Senate, if this call for this extraordinary session of the General Assembly of Pennsylvania be free from political significance, if it has no political purpose or design, as it is alleged, if it is actuated purely and simply by an unselfish devotion to the people's cause and to the public welfare, as it purports to be, then let the governor of Pennsylvania make a statement to the people of this state that he is not now and that he will not be a candidate for the Republican nomination for the United States Senate on the 18th day of next May. That statement in itself will place this call for the special session in a very different light than the one it now occupies in the minds of the people of Pennsylvania and the bills presented at this session in a very different position than the one they now have. That statement in itself will largely tend to negative the very general and prevailing opinion entertained by the people of Pennsylvania that this call was not for the purpose specified in the call itself, that it was for political effect, and ladies and gentlemen of the Senate of Pennsylvania, let us lay these cards on the top of the table, let us give to the people of Pennsylvania whatever legislation they actually need, but do not further burden the statutes of this state with useless, needless and superfluous legislation. Let us be honest with ourselves, honest with each other and honest with the great people of Pennsylvania, whose servants we are.

Mr. Schantz. Mr. President, I would like to ask the Senator from Franklin, Mr. Bonbrake, a question.

The President. Will the Senator from Franklin, Mr. Bonbrake, permit himself to be interrogated?

Mr. Bonbrake. Mr. President, certainly. Mr. Schantz. Mr. President, if the governor would make a statement that he was not now and would not be a candidate for the Republican nomination for the United States Senate at the primaries on May 18th, would the gentleman consider that promise binding, or would he feel safe that the promise would hold until after the last day of filing petitions had expired?

Mr. Bonbrake. Mr. President, not being an emissary of the governor, as you may very well judge, I am unable to answer that question, but I do feel that in view of the present condition, a majority of the people of Pennsylvania look upon this session as a means for the political advancement of the governor of Pennsylvania and that this session is intended to further his political ambition and furnish a vehicle upon which he can ride and sell his political wares to the electors of Pennsylvania, at an expense of probably $750,000 to the taxpayers of Pennsylvania.

FREE ANDERSON OF PEN PAROLE

Former Anti-Saloon League
Superintendent of New York
Is Granted Full Release.

New York, Feb. 5.—William H. Anderson, former superintendent of the New York State Anti-Saloon League, has been granted a full release from Sing Sing prison, where he served nine months for third degree forgery. He had been released on parole in December, 1924.

Sentence Expires In Eight Weeks

His unconditional release was granted by the state board of parole last Friday, but did not become known until Wednesday. The board's action was taken eight weeks in advance of the time when Anderson would have been automatically restored to full liberty by termination of the original prison sentence.

Other Charges Pending

Early last year, Anderson began a fight for absolute discharge from parole, but the state parole board refused at that time to grant his request. Immediately after his release from Sing Sing Anderson was arrested on indictments charging grand larceny, and extortion. He is now under $5,000 bail on these charges.

Both these indictments and the one on which he was convicted were in connection with his transactions of the State Anti-Saloon League's affairs. He was sentenced to serve from one to two years for the third degree forgery offense.

Demand Passage Of New Dry Law

Passage of laws to stop the flow of alcohol into bootleggers' bottles was demanded by supporters of the Federal Constitution and State laws in a hearing Tuesday before the Senate Law and Order Committee in Harrisburg.

Opponents of the bills were revealed for the most part as admitted enemies of prohibition and their arguments were centered mostly against the Volstead act, passed by Congress.

The bills, sponsored by the Pinchot administration, provide a state alcohol permit board to regulate distilleries and breweries. Louis E. Graham, a deputy attorney general, cited figures to show the need of such legislation.

There are now eighteen distilling plants in Philadelphia, he said, and because of the transportation of alcohol from some of these plants to denaturing plants leads to the bootleggers occur. He told how in 1924 there were twenty-eight alcohol permits revoked. These are Federal permits, he made clear, and within a comparatively short time twenty-four of the permits were restored. Fourteen of these were later revoked for violations. With a state law to provide inspection, he asserted, such a condition could not exist in reference to the mishandling of permits, and there would be a method to stop the leaks in transportation because there would be a stronger and more vigilant supervision.

COAL PARLEY IS BROKEN; FINISH BATTLE IS SEEN

Miners and Operators Fail to Reach Hard Coal Strike Set- tlement.

Philadelphia, Feb. 5.—Anthracite operators and miners broke Tuesday on the question of arbitration and then squared away for what both sides proclaim is a finish fight.

The break came on a motion of the operators, after John L. Lewis and his associates had rejected two peace plans, one leaving final determination of all questions in dispute to Charles Evans Hughes, the other to the Anthracite Conciliation Board, sitting with its umpire, Charles P. Neill.

After the break Mr. Lewis said the strike had become a lockout and proclaimed the miners' intention of fighting the issue of arbitration "until the time comes when in the light of reason an honorable agreement can be made."

Both Standing Pat

For the operators, William W. Inglis attributed the break to "the blind determination of Mr. Lewis to impose his will upon us, the industry and the people of the country," and announced the operators' purpose to go over the union leader's head and appeal to the miners direct.

When both groups had parted, they considered the question of future action. The operators decided to stand pat. The union chiefs arranged a plan of campaign to further finance the strike and to keep up the morale of the men. Appeals made to the unions of the country for relief will be made.

Operators To Inform Miners

There would be no interference with the men now protecting the mines against damage, Mr. Lewis said, nor was any likely until one or more operators attempted resumption. This would be the signal for the 8,000 still at work to quit.

No attempt will be made immediately to open any of the properties, the opinion being that opportunity must be given for the men to consider the situation before opportunity of returning to work is given them.

At the final conference the chairman, Alvan Markle, pointing to a large flag in the room, appealed to the

BRITONS BALK RUM SMUGGLING

Bishop of London Presides at Meeting in That City Which Condemns Rum Running To U. S.

London, Feb. 5.—The smuggling of liquor into the United States by British subjects was severely condemned in a largely attended meeting in the church house under the shadow of Westminster Abbey. The meeting was held to frame a response to the appeal recently sent abroad by the American Citizens' Committee of One Thousand. An official touch was given the occasion by a letter from Sir Austen Chamberlain, the foreign secretary, indicating entire sympathy with the purpose of the gathering.

DIDN'T WASTE MONEY ON FOOD

"The recent campaign against wastefulness in eating did not affect me much as I haven't been able to eat any thing but toast and tea for the last five years. Even that would create gas and cause me distress. My weight was down to eighty-four pounds and my complexion muddy. I had frequent pains in the region of my appendix. I am glad I did not listen to an operation, as MAYR'S 'One Dose Will Convince' has made a new woman of me." It is a simple, harmless preparation that removes the catarrhal mucus from the intestinal tract and allays the inflammation which causes practically all stomach, liver and intestinal ailments, including appendicitis. Uses Resinol for boils

First application gives relief

Paintsville, Ky., June 20.—"I had five boils on my neck, and after reading of your treatment for them I used it as directed. I was very much surprised on waking the next morning to find that they were not a bit sore and the swelling was going down fast. I will know the next time what to get when I have sores of this kind."

I must say that your Resinol Soap is a wonder for cleansing the hands and face. I am a painter, and at the end of my day's work I use your soap. It makes my hands and face whiter than any other soap has been able to do so far. (Signed) Chester E. Vanhoose, 341 East Third St.

The Bishop of London, who presided at the meeting was not called to express any views about prohibition, but he added that he thought the British people had been told a great many manufactured lies from across the ocean about prohibition. There is not the slightest doubt, he said, that the industrial output of America has increased and public health improved. "You can not think anything of those silly little fools who swagger at dances with brandy flasks. That's mere bravado," he said. "You have to look at the great broad effect upon the whole nation."

It is a gross impertinence, the bishop continued, "to try to undo anything that a great sister nation has chosen to decide for its own good."

Cries of "Shame!" were raised when the bishop cited official American statistics showing that in the last six months of 1925 twenty out of twenty-four liquor ships seized by the American authorities were British.

Quick Relief for RHEUMATISM

Local Druggists Sell Rheuma on Money-Back Plan

If you suffer from torturing rheumatic pains, swollen, twisted joints, and suffer intensely because your system is full of that dangerous poison that makes thousands helpless and kills thousands years before their time, then you need Rheuma, and need it now.

Start taking it today. Rheuma acts at once on kidneys, liver, stomach and blood, and you can sincerely exclaim: "Good riddance to bad rubbish." Many people, the most skeptical of skeptics right in this city and in the country hereabouts, bless the day when People's Drug Store and other druggists offered Rheuma to the afflicted at a small price and guaranteed money refunded if not satisfied. If you have rheumatism get a bottle of Rheuma today.—adv.
